Press Maintains British Mine Gathers Ammunition Along Border for Senate Fight on Executive.

Declares "President Has Had Crisis Every Saturday and Great Diplomatic Victory Every Monday."

Secretary of State Lansing said last in gift he had received no dispatches year terday bearing on the recent attacks on passenger and merchant ships carrying Americans. Germany continues officially to accept no responsibility for the alleged attack on the Channel liner Sussex. County on Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, has no instructions to discuss the matter with the State Department.

In the light of these negative developments, the most significant facts bearing on the submarine issue were, according to officials here, the cabled accounts of comment which have found their way into the German newspapers and been passed by the German censor for readers abroad.

This comment adheres to the contention that a British mine and not a German submarine damaged the Sussex. But it also contains a hint at the bare possibility that a German submarine commander might have torpedoed the Sussex. But it also contains a hint at the bare possibility that a German submarine commander might have torpedoed the Sussex in the mistaken belief that this vessel was still engaged in the service of transporting troops from Great Britain to France.

Officials here explained that this might have an important bearing on the case should a tardy report from a submarine commander arsuming responsibility be made public from Berlin or should the United States press its case, backed by
